Re: 1933 Double Eagle Coins

Dear Dan:

I write regarding the Langbord family's recent discovery of ten 1933 Double Eagle gold coins, and the United State's Mint's apparent decision to respond to their voluntary disclosure of these remarkable coins by seeking to retain them.

As you know, the Langbord family has handled their discovery of these numismatic treasures in an extraordinarily forthright and open manner. On September 22, 2004, the Langbord family, while fully reserving all of their rights to the coins, made their 1933 Double Eagles available to the Mint to enable the government to test the coins for authenticity and secure the coins while the Langbord family and the government discussed resolving any issues relating to the coins. They have attempted to work cooperatively with the United States Mint, and have been patient as the government took nearly nine months to decide how to respond to their discovery, and took nearly as long to finally test the Langbord 1933 Double Eagles and confirm their authenticity.

The Langbord family is extremely disappointed that despite this deliberative process and agreement that the coins are actual 1933 Double Eagles, the Mint has rejected their good faith efforts to amicably resolve any issues relating to their coins, and instead has taken the untenable position that it will attempt to retain their 1933 Double Eagles. The government's position wholly ignores (i) that the Mint only became aware of the coins because the Langbord family freely brought their coins to the government's attention, (ii) the factual and legal reasons that the coins should be freely traded like every other numismatic treasure with a colorful history, (iii) the Mint's own recognition of the numismatic interest in the 1933 Double eagle and the salutary effect of making the coin available for public sale, and (iv) that the government will not be able to show how the 1933 Double Eagles left the Mint over 70 years ago or that the coins are subject to forfeiture.

The Mint's recent actions in the face of the Langbord family's exemplary conduct in voluntarily apprising the Mint of their discovery of these ten 1933 Double Eagles prove the adage that "no good deed goes unpunished." But for the Langbord family contacting the Mint and informing it that they had discovered these extremely valuable 1933 Double Eagles, the Mint would not have even known that these ten 1933 Double Eagles existed, let alone been in a position to voice an opinion concerning their disposition. The Mint's apparent decision to respond to the Langbord family's good faith efforts by attempting to take their 1933 Double Eagles will certainly discourage others in the future from cooperating with the Mint regarding numismatic rarities.

Moreover, the government's actions are also inconsistent with how it has treated other coins of numismatic interest that have a purported "colorful background." Such coins have been bought and sold without government intervention and, in some cases, with the government's blessing. For example, the government has long permitted the numismatic community to enjoy the 1913 Liberty Nickel, which has regularly been sold in high-profile auctions, including as recently as last month when one specimen sold for $4.15 million. The Mint was not authorized to strike any Liberty nickels with a 1913 date since the Indian Head "Buffalo" nickel design had been adopted for use on all 1913 nickels. The 1913 Nickels were, in the words of CNN, "minted illegally, possibly by a mint official. They were never put into circulation and were considered illegal to own for many years because they were not regular issue." ("Rare Nickel Sells for $4 Million," CNN.com, June 2, 2005). Nonetheless, the government took no action to interfere with this (or any other) sale of the 1913 Liberty Nickel, or with the ownership of this coin within the numismatic community.

Similarly, as we know well, the Mint sanctioned the public auction of a 1933 Double Eagle, an event the Mint trumpeted on its own website until very recently. In connection with this auction, the Mint made clear that it fully recognizes the numismatic interest in these coins having noted that "this storied coin has been the center of international numismatic intrigue for more than seventy years," (Mint Director Henrietta Holsman Fore, U.S. Mint Website, press release of prior sale of 1933 Double Eagle), and that "[t]he 1933 Double Eagle has, since the year of its creation, been the stuff of legend" (U.S. Mint Website). Moreover, the Mint specifically acknowledged the great benefit in making these coins available for purchase and sale. In the words of Mint Director Henrietta Holsman Fore, describing the Sotheby's auction of that 1933 Double Eagle (which resulted in millions of dollars in proceeds for the government):

We are very pleased with the sale. This coin, once worth only $20, should reinforce the notion that there is tremendous value in coin collecting it is not only an enjoyable hobby, but also an interesting and historically rich pursuit marked by exciting occasions such as this one.

KRAMER LEVIN NAFTALIS & FRANKEL LLP

Dan Shaver, Esq.

(U.S. Mint Website). The Mint's decision to try to prevent collectors from freely trading these numismatic legends is entirely inconsistent with the Mint's own practices and policies and unjustified as a matter of fact and law.

Finally, there is no basis for the government to seek forfeiture of the Langbord family's 1933 Double Eagles. The government will not be able to establish based on any reliable or admissible evidence how the 1933 Double Eagles left the Mint over 70 years ago or that the coins are subject to forfeiture.

For all of these reasons, we urge the Mint to reconsider its position. Otherwise, now that the testing of their 1933 Double Eagles has been completed, the Langbord family requests that their coins be immediately returned.

Very truly yours,

Barry H. Berke

Re: CLAIM FOR DAMAGE - 1933 Double Eagle Coins

Dear Messrs. Shaver and Lebryk:

I am writing to submit a damages claim on behalf of my clients, Joan Langbord, Roy Langbord and David Langbord (the "Langbord Family"). See, e.g., 18 C.F.R. § 14.2. As previously stated in the Langbord Family's Seized Asset Claim submitted on September 9, 2005, the government has unlawfully seized, forfeited and converted ten 1933 Double Eagle gold coins ("1933 Double Eagle gold coins" or "Coins") belonging to the Langbord Family. By its unlawful actions, the Department of the Treasury and the United States Mint deprived the Langbord Family of its property, resulting in damages in the amount of the value of the Coins. Below are the details of its claim.

Claimants

1. Joan Langbord, with an address of Dolphin Towers, 101 South Gulfstream Avenue, Apt. 10K, Sarasota, FL 34236 and 2401 Pennsylvania Avenue, Apt. 11B-21, Philadelphia, P.A. 19130. Date of birth is 3/12/1930. Married. Store owner of I. Switt Jewelry, with an address of 130 S. 8th Street, Philadelphia, PA 19107, (215) 922-3830.
2. Roy Langbord, with an address of 302 West 77th Street, New York, N.Y. 10024. Date of birth is 7/19/1952. Married. Self-employed.
3. David Langbord, with an address of 1573 Bay Point Drive, Virginia Beach, V.A. 23454. Date of birth is 5/10/1955. Married. Self-employed.

Basis of Claim

In August 2004, counsel for the Langbord Family notified Daniel P. Shaver, Chief Counsel of the United States Mint ("the Chief Counsel"), that the Family owned and was in possession of ten 1933 Double Eagle gold coins.

Shortly thereafter, the United States Mint ("the Mint") requested the opportunity to test these 1933 Double Eagle gold coins to confirm that they were authentic. This request was documented in a letter dated September 21, 2004 from counsel for the Langbord Family to the Chief Counsel: "At the request of the United States Mint, Roy Langbord will make the Coins available to the government on Wednesday, September 22, 2004 based on our understanding that the government will test the Coins for authenticity and secure the Coins while we discuss a possible resolution of the issues relating to the Coins." The Langbord Family expressly reserved all of its rights: "This agreement to make available the Coins as described above is without prejudice to all of my clients' rights and remedies existing at law, in equity, or otherwise. We specifically reserve all rights and remedies with respect to the Coins." Moreover, the letter explicitly referred to the Langbords' "ownership of ten 1933 Double Eagles."

Pursuant to this agreement, the Mint took the Coins in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on September 22, 2004. Specifically, the Chief Counsel, others from the Mint, and agents employed by the United States Secret Service entered Sovereign Bank, 2000 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on September 22, 2004, at which time Roy Langbord removed the Langbord Family's Coins from a safe deposit box and the government took the Coins.

In June 2005, the Chief Counsel advised counsel for the Langbord Family that the Mint had authenticated the Langbords' 1933 Double Eagles, and confirmed that the Coins were, in fact, genuine.

By letter dated July 25, 2005, the Langbord Family requested that the Mint return its property, the ten 1933 Double Eagle gold coins.

By letter dated August 9, 2005, and sent by facsimile on August 10, 2005, the Mint informed the Langbord Family that it would not return its property to it.

On September 9, 2005, the Langbord Family filed a Seized Asset Claim with the Mint and the Treasury Department reasserting its claim to ownership of the Coins and seeking the return of its seized property pursuant to CAFRA.

By letter dated December 5, 2005, the government returned the Langbord Family's Seized Asset Claim "without action." The government restated that it had no intention of returning the Coins nor commencing a forfeiture proceeding. On information and belief, the Coins are being unlawfully detained at Fort Knox in the state of Kentucky.

Property Damage

By virtue of the government's unlawful seizure, forfeiture and conversion of the ten 1933 Double Eagle coins, the Langbord Family has suffered the loss of its valuable property.

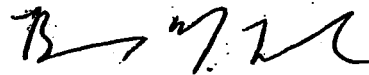

Amount of Claim

The Langbord Family's claim for the government's wrongful deprivation of the ten Coins is $40 million.

Insurance Information

The Langbord Family does not have any insurance to cover this claim.

Sincerely yours,
